Hello,

- yes, the tile is rated for outside.
- it will be applied with grout. I don't know the specifics, but probably regular kind. I'd be happy to use whichever the association would prefer.
- the outer edges would be untouched. It will remain brick and concrete as it is today. The tile is extremely thin, will not be seen from the outer edge

Are there any other details I can provide? Thank you!

Good afternoon,

Thank you for the information related to your review request. I will be in touch again once I review the proposal with my colleague. As the material you have selected isn't original to the house, I expect this may need to be reviewed by the Historic District Commission at an upcoming meeting. In the meantime, I have a few questions:

- Is this material rated to be used outside?
- How would the tiles be applied to the concrete, and what type of grout/mortar would be used?
- How would the outer edges of the patio be faced since the underlayment and tile would be higher than the existing floor?

Thank you,

Audra Dye
